

The Everyday Daredevil

Script

You may not wreck cars or jump out of buildings, but let's not pretend you don't take risks. You are an everyday daredevil.

You sometimes forget to set an alarm, but you wake up anyway. You brush your teeth and then drink orange juice. You drive on an empty tank of gas. While other men live their lives as society dictates, you start puzzles from the center. When you drop ice, you kick it under the fridge, you maverick.

You skip tutorials. You eat after 9pm. And you check your facebook during work for the thrill. You get in the front seat of taxis and cook chicken that's been in the fridge for four days.

All of your passwords are the same, you risk-taker. And they don't contain numbers and letters. You wear white and eat spaghetti. You ARE the volunteer. And you ask for the recommendations.

When something needs to be thrown away, you toss it like Jordan in the fourth quarter. You don't let a blinking hand tell you when to stop. Electrical plugs? From the cord. You'll open that without even tapping the top.

You don't eject. You won't spill. And you'll do all those groceries in one trip. You guess at names. And when you have a crush at work, you always . . .

Hey, I was wondering if you uh. . . uhm. . . maybe you wanna . . . go. . . uh, over to the conference room? We have a meeting . . .

Oh... Yeah. . .

Um, okay. Great. . . O-kay bye.

You'll get'em next time daredevil. Onward!

